

which also she had brought. Potatoes were put in the bottom, and fish on top, then covered with a large tin lid. The kettle is now owned by E.G. Lusty, and is on exhibition among the antiques displayed on the ground of the Old Boys' Association, Port Glasgow.

Donald Campbell, husband of Nelly, did not come to Canada until October 1818. They had a large family, all born in Scotland, two daughters and seven sons. One daughter, Mary, born in the Parish of Kilmartin, Argyleshire, Scotland, in 1797, married Donald McIntyre. They came to Canada, on "The Crinan", June 19, 1819. They landed in Quebec August 12th, and arrived in Aldborough September 29, 1819. The other daughter married Mr. John McIntosh. There is a record of one son, Dougal, born in 1800. He married Ann Paterson, daughter of Donald Paterson and Lilly McKay. She came with her parents in 1818, when they settled on the farm with her father who donated a portion of his land for the Paterson Cemetery.

It is said that Nelly Campbell was a sharp business woman and knew a bargain when she saw one. Once when a certain piece of land was for sale, she knew that her son Dougal wanted it. But she wanted it for another son, James. To obtain a deed in those days, one had to go to "Little York" (Toronto) to get it. Imagine this fearless, determined woman walking more than a hundred and sixty miles, through forest, with only a blazed trail to guide her. As she was coming from the necessary office with the coveted deed in her hand, she met her son, Dougal, about to go in on the same errand.

While there is no mention anywhere of the time the Campbells left Aldborough, it is recorded that they were among the early settlers who helped tame the virgin forest. Sometime later, the father and mother, along with their seven sons, moved to Southwold, where each of the sons owned farms on the Union Road between Fingal and Port Stanley. The two daughters lived and died in Brook Township, near Alvinston.

It was at her daughter Mary McIntyre's home that Nelly passed away December 28, 1851, at the age of 81 years. Her remains were taken on a bob-sleigh to Fingal Cemetery, where she, her husband, and most of her family are buried.

(Mrs. Mitchell F. Hepburn is living on one of the farms at the present time.)
